Christine White

The story at the heart of Queensland Hospital Watch

Rosemary Wanless & Brooke Watson

Christine's daughters and QHW co-founders

Her story became our purpose.

Queensland Hospital Watch grew from our family's experience following the death of our mum, Christine White, in August 2025. What began with two daughters trying to understand what had happened became a commitment to help other people feel less alone when navigating healthcare and support systems.

"We couldn't change what happened to Mum, but we could make sure her story mattered."

Today, that purpose is Queensland Hospital Watch.

QHW supports patients, families, carers and healthcare workers through advocacy, navigation, information, community connection and practical non-clinical support.

Your partnership helps that purpose grow.

Partnership opportunities

The Christine White Community Partnership Program gives businesses and organisations a practical way to stand alongside QHW's work. Partnerships may be financial or in-kind, with recognition matched appropriately to the contribution.

IN-KIND PARTNER

Skills, services and resources that help QHW do more.

We welcome appropriate contributions of professional expertise, technology, equipment, venues, printing, communications and other resources. Recognition is matched to the genuine value and nature of the contribution.

Recognition, never influence.

QHW's independence is fundamental to the trust placed in us. Financial or in-kind support does not provide a supporter with influence over QHW's advocacy, individual cases, public positions, healthcare commentary or organisational decisions. QHW may decline a proposed relationship where an actual or perceived conflict could compromise our independence, reputation or community trust.

A note about partnership

The word “partner” in this program describes a sponsorship and recognition relationship only. It does not create a legal partnership between QHW and a supporting organisation. Specific sponsorship benefits will be agreed in writing.
